

Create Your Retirement Paycheck

Retirement is a time to pursue your interests and to enjoy the lifestyle you envision. It's also an exciting period of adjustment, as you enter a new stage of your life.

One of the biggest adjustments for many retirees is getting used to being truly financially independent. It can be a big step, especially if you've always relied on an employer to provide your income during your working years. For self-employed people and business owners, retirement can call for learning a new way of thinking about your income, as well. So it's a period of major transformation for all concerned.

As you work toward achieving your financial independence at retirement, another change to be aware of is the fact that your finances may become more complex to manage. That's because your retirement income plan may include many different income sources. And using them all efficiently to create a reliable income stream will likely become a higher priority. Consider where your money may be coming from:

- Dividends and/or profits from the sale of investments and other assets acquired during your lifetime.
- Distributions from IRAs, defined benefit (pension) plans and/or defined contribution (401k, 403b, SEP, SIMPLE, etc.) plans.
- Personal savings.
- Social Security benefits.
- Part-time jobs and self-employment.

RBC Wealth Management offers two proven tools that can help you simplify the way you manage all these sources as you use them to create your retirement "paycheck." Each tool provides features designed to make it easy to access to your cash and help keep your nest egg growing. Depending on your situation and goals, your Financial Advisor can help you choose the one that's best suited for you.
